

CUPID DEFIES CENTURY OLD ROTHSCHILD COMMAND

Baron Von Rothschild.

Miss Montefiore.

Vienna, Oct. 2.—The richest Jewish maid in Europe, Miss Clarice Sebag Montefiore, has captured the richest Jewish bachelor, Baron Alphonse Mayer von Rothschild, and they will soon be married at the London home of the bride-to-be.

While the wedding will unite the world's two richest Jewish families, it will be in defiance of the dying injunction placed upon the male members of the Rothschild family by its founder, Mayer Amschel Rothschild, who more than a century ago called his five sons to his bedside and admonished them to be loyal to the faith of Moses, to remain united to the end, and to intermarry.

"Observe those things," he said, "and you will be rich among the richest, and the world will be yours."

Kings and nations have come and gone; empires have become bankrupt and mighty; men have returned to dust, but every second of every day saw the Rothschild fortune grow. In Austria, Belgium, Germany, France and England members of the family spread out; everywhere they were, and are still, the pawnbrokers to rulers and nations.

And they live up to the command to intermarry. None of that gold ever flowed away. Baron James, for years the head of the French branch, married his niece. Baron Lionel of England married his cousin, and so it went on. When there wasn't a Rothschild girl for a Rothschild man to marry he remained single until
